The slice() method selects a subset of elements based on its index. A subset is a set that is a part of a larger set. This method is used to limit the selection of elements in a group, by a start and end point: the start parameter is a starting index (starts at 0) from which to create the subset, and the stop parameter is an optional ending point.

Method - W3Schools

Definition and Usage.

The border-image-slice property specifies how to slice the image specified by border-image-source. The image is always sliced into nine sections: four corners, four edges and the middle. The "middle" part is treated as fully transparent, unless the fill keyword is set.
